By: Casey Dillon

Sergeant Michael Landry was born in Frankford Germany to an Army family, March 16, 1989. His father is still in the armed forces and his two brothers are as well. His family moved to Lubbock Texas where he grew up. As a young boy Landry wished to become a police officer, probably dressed in green since it is his favorite color. Because his family is involved heavily in the military, Landry says that it is very stressful on his mother.

In high school Landry enjoyed math and learned two languages, German and French. After graduating he became an electrician until he became an American soldier. Landry also enjoys sitting eating pizza while watching either a Dallas Cowboys or Texas Tech football game. He watches "21/2 Men" and reruns of the "Fresh Prince." He takes part in most holidays. He is a musician and has talent in playing the guitar, drums and the violin. He hopes to retire from the Army and go to school to become a lawyer probably in his home town. One thing is for certain about Landry, he is a hard working American hero, although this is his first tour in Iraq, Landry is still protecting the American dream and its freedoms.
